Philip Hale recently suggested that modern readers would be materially assisted from the tyranny of tradition if a distinguished coterie of men like Mr. Howells, Mr. Chesterton, Mr. Shaw and Dr. Eliot would draw up a list of the "25 worst books." writer in the Providence Journal undertakes the task, as pride and pretense to professing admiration for books they never read and never intend to read. This writer in his list names "Paradise Regained," "The "Wutthering Queene," Heights," "Aurora Leigh," "John Halifax," "Hypathia," and several other books that people today care nothing for, but for which great admiration is confessed simply because their past fame makes present readers afraid or ashamed to admit ignorance of them. Senator Hoar once admitted that often he preferred "Old Sleuth" to his classic Greek volumes. Other great men make no secret of their reading "bad books" for diversion. A list of "worst books" sworn to by men whose opinions carry weight would create a greater freedom and boldness among those misguided folk who draw up lists of "the world's best books." And in due season a natural man might find in such lists some of his real favorites, instead of the dull, dead volumes that are now included not on merit, but by reason of the power of tradition.

Robert Raikes, the man who founded the modern Sunday school, was a journalist, with a passion for what be termed "botanizing is human nature," and seems to have had very little in his makeup of the conventional religious reformed. His great experience is said to have been suggested by the disturbance caused by crowds of little ragamuffins playing beneath his window on Sunday afternoon when he was correcting proofs. "Why should they not be got together and taught the elements of religion and good behavior?" he asked himself, and answered the question by establishing the first Sunday school at Gloucester in 1870, says the London Chronicle. It was characteristic of the man that in his school scheme he laid as great stress upon the inculcation of "manners" ing of the catechism.

To sleep-perhaps to dream. Most of us have our special form of bad dream, born of ill advised and ill digested supper usually. The commonest of the smaller nightmares is the experience of facing a drawing room or a public thoroughfare without clothes. But I suppose we all have our special horror on the edge between sleeping and waking, says a writer in the London Chronicle. My own is the belief that I am in for my finals at Oxford and have not yet looked at Aristotle, and simply can't get into the time at my disposal. And when I really wake to the certainty that I have passed all my examinations until the day of judgment that is the most joyous moment of dis-

The little girl who asked the government for a Panama hat came off more luckily than the boy who wanted a "dog of war." She got the hat, while the boy was informed that the government had use for all the dogs of war it had in stock. The moral seems to be to ask the rulers for something they do not care to keep.

Dr. Hugonencq, a French scientist, has written a pamphlet to prove that human flesh is the only proper food for man and the very last word of science and hygiene and perfect digestion. He omits, however, to tell where, when and how he got his data.

Sympathies for the intrepid explorers devoured by cannibals would be more intense if it were not for the known fact that there's no place a scientist won't go in search of information.

That Hetch Hetchy matter is settled now and newspaper men won't have to bother any more about whether or not the name should be hyphenated.

HARDWARE (COMPANY)

Among the American peasants the old patriarchal system prevails. The entire family of a score or two of people of several generations lives beneath a single roof, says the Christian Herald. Together both men and women till the fields in a primitive manner, and when the grain is ripe, they take a sheaf to the roadside that the passing stranger may give a present and thus bless the crop. Their houses are of stone roughly laid, or of mud, or frequently they are half underground, and from a distance their domelike roofs resemble the mounds of a prairie dog settlement.

Before You Move Investigate

Be sure your new home has that important modern convenience — electric light. There are many such and they are in great demand by those who know how to enjoy them. The modern electric light is so much better than any other that no one need hesitate about the cost. The General Electric Company has perfected its MAZDA lamp which gives twice as much light as ordinary electric lamps using an equal amount of electricity.

We Have G.E. MAZDA Lamps

For all those who live in wired houses we offer an opportunity of getting the benefit of the great light giving quality of these lamps. For those who own unwired houses on our distributing lines we will give advice of value in wiring houses for electric light.
